

Even more than other higher-ed institutions, regional public universities are increasingly struggling with enrollment and funding challenges, in part due to growing competition from private colleges, public flagships, and their fellow regionals. A recent Chronicle survey of administrators emphasizes these challenges — but also finds optimism about the future.

Perception Problems

Nearly

say the American public and state and federal lawmakers don't understand the value of regional public universities.

Resource Restrictions

Nearly

say they don't have the resources to support their strategic visions.

Biggest Challenges

Asked to identify the biggest challenges they face, the top four answers were:

Signs of Strength

say they agree at least somewhat that their institution has a good plan to improve its finances.

say they're optimistic about their institution's future financial and enrollment prospects.

say they agree at least somewhat that their institution has a good plan to retain students.

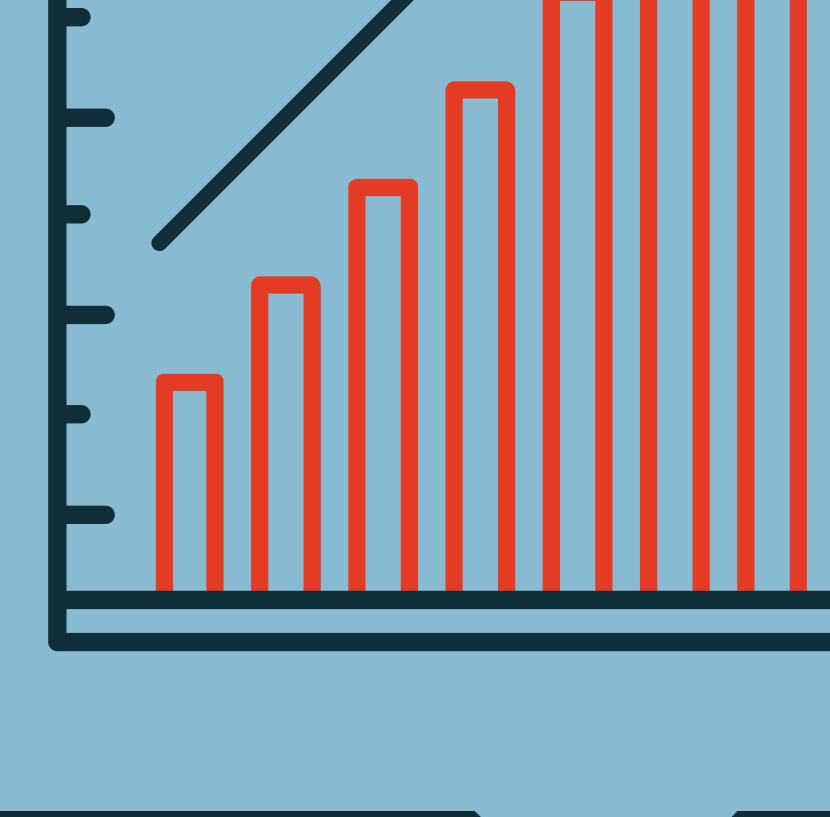

for Growth

Opportunities

grow revenue at their institutions, the top three answers were: Expanding online programs

Asked where they saw opportunities to

- Expanding graduate programs
- Expanding work-force preparation and technical programs

What's Ahead? Without an influx of funding or decreased regionals will find ways to be resilient, adapting as they have in the past and finding new equilibriums at which to operate, including by focusing on core strengths like work-force development and service to their communities.

competition, regional public universities cutbacks, and even closures. Yet many will likely face more consolidations,

This infographic was produced by Chronicle Intelligence. Please contact Cl@chronicle.com with questions or comments. ©2024 by The Chronicle of Higher Education Inc. All rights reserved.

This material may not be reproduced without prior written permission of The Chronicle.

For permission requests, contact us at copyright@chronicle.com.

OF HIGHER EDUCATION®